I've learnt a lot, most of that learning was gathered within LLF work with communities where I was able to compare difference between coastal and rural areas and see what daily activities are carried out. While being in Croatia on my island, we often think the "grass in the neighbor yard is more green than on our", but it isn't like that. I've seen many good examples of rural projects, but also some of them that had to be carried out even if the project was more political than real, which is a pity, because some people would really use that money on purpose for a better idea.
